It lies in the northeastern portion of the U.S. state of Michigan, northeast of the Keweenaw Peninsula and Lake Superior. Traverse Range The Traverse Range runs through the western portion of the Gogebic Range, where it separates from the Green Range to the west. On the east, the Gogebic Range merges with the Keweenaw Peninsula, then splits into the Uphaus Ridge, a smaller extension of the Appalachian Mountains, and the Devil's Punchbowl. The Traverse Range is considered to form the northeastern border of the Appalachian Mountains. The Traverse Range cuts through the eastern portions of the towns of Iron Mountain, and Grand Rapids. Geography The highest point in the range is the summit of Bachelor Peak, at. Geologically, the range is the northeastern part of the oldest rock in North America. Dating to the Precambrian eon, the range is made up of slates and shales. In addition to its normal stratigraphy, a certain amount of evaporite is present in the Gogebic Range. The Great Lakes Playa and Lake Gogebic (formerly Greenwood Lake) formed as an artesian soda lake, probably in the Proterozoic, about 800 million years ago. Natural history 04aeff104c
