Firstly, let's look at the benefits of the real photo editing tools. This part is not about "how to" things and the technical details. You can google those, or try other websites for the more technical details about software, applications and products. Some of its most important benefits are listed below:

- No matter for anyone, the less the knoweldge, the easier it is to use the software.
- No matter how many times you are using the same software, you will not get bored and forgotten.
- If you get really compliuste and need to edit a complicated gif or jpg picture, you will not feel like you are wasting time.
- It is easy to use the software and increase its efficiency.
- It has powerful features and tools.
- It is more user friendly.
- It has good, tested, and reliable software.

With all the Adobe creative tools, the biggest challenge faced with all the challenges is how to get the work done. It is in no way a still photo editing software. User productivity varies due to the size of the file, resolution of the image, complexity of the image, number of important people involved in the photo editing process. Some people insist on using Photoshop, some go for Adobe Lightroom. Some people like to use tools like Photoshop to do some photo editing work. And, limited budgets and time forces the user to have some basic tools in hand for basic photo editing work. By the way, there are two kinds of photo editing tools: for "real" photo editing and for compositing. They are basically two different sets of Adobe software products. Photoshop is one of the most advanced tools, although it is designed to cover multiple needs.
